CAUTION - EXTERNAL:

Hello my name is Christopher Jones and I am a member of the GM class action lawsuit for the ignition switch.

I'm getting a bit concerned about this JND handling the funds for this settlement. They stopped updating their website months ago and have since then went past the date when they said they would update information and start paying people their share of the fund. I've also noticed that they've scrubbed the July 19th pay after date from the site but the reps are still repeating it like it's still active. The lack of transparency kind of worries me. We don't know how many vehicles are involved, we don't know how much this JND is going to charge for their services and deduct from the common fund, we don't even know how much we're going to get from this lawsuit individually. Every time I email them they talk me in circles and refer me back to a website that they do not update. There's zero transparency and with me being overseas I want to make sure that everything is done right. JND seems to be known for making a lot of mistakes and cutting corners which is worrying. Is there anything that you know that you could tell me about this and how things are going?
